This is a new version of Directshow filter (tutorial) by Ger Hennig from HDFN (ger.karo.org/). It solves the problem of the high amount of work of up-to-date (2019) media-format demuxer in an early try. But the new one includes some new features and one problem was fixed. That's a common pattern of Ger Hennig's releases, that are not working in v1. It takes a little while to adopt. And finally I created a directshow template to extract audio-video-data from wma-files with this filter. Dark web is a little bit like the backstage of the crime. Development of respiration in larval European starfish, Asterina pectinifera. The developmental patterns of larval respiratory activity were investigated in the starfish, Asterina pectinifera. Larvae were incubated and the volume of gas produced per animal was measured over a 60 min period using a gas-volume analyzer. Activity first appears in the coelenteron during the middle of the third feeding stage, reaching a maximum at the end of the fourth stage. Respiration is limited to the coelenteron and is highest in the central intestinal cells of the 4th and 5th stages. Activity declines during the remaining staving stages, and again at the time of metamorphosis. The results are compared to previous data on larval respiratory activity in the starfish, A. rubens. The results support the hypothesis that the two starfish are closely phylogenetically related and are discussed in relation to recent studies on the development of respiratory activity in other marine invertebrates.
